The people behind the scenes

Over the years, we have presented to you many stories of the children in our care and their successes. There have been stories of children putting on Christ in baptism, winning honors in 4-H, making a transition from high school to college, being named Homecoming Queen and a whole host of others. In the shadows of these stories has been an army of ministry-minded people who have given of their talents to help each child find their potential and achieve success.

In this issue of Spectrum, you will have the privilege of seeing the faces of the men and women who work long hours and who use every ounce of love and care they have to make sure God's hurting children have a home where they can find help and hope.

These people have come together from many different places to form their talents into a well-rounded, effective program that reaches deep within a child to help heal their pains so they can begin to focus on growth and a future.

MICAH BRINKLEY

On most occasions, you hear about the "frontline" people who are charged with the hands-on care of the children. They wear the titles of housemom and housedad. They are with the children around the clock and bear the majority of the responsibility for their care. You will read more about what some of these people experience on a daily basis and the rewards that come with their labors.

Walking alongside these people are other groups of people who are rarely mentioned, but their daily tasks are essential to making Children's Homes, Inc. a great place for children.

Our Department of Child and Family Services is filled with men and women who support the houseparents and encourage the children on a daily basis. They are sounding boards for the houseparents, motivators for the children, problem-solvers, teachers, tutors, mentors, mediators, and moderators. They help keep the children focused and moving in a productive direction for their lives.

Also working with children are the women who facilitate our foster care program. While they have an actual office in Searcy, Ark., their offices are more often in a car, a courtroom or in the living room of one of our many foster homes. They provide support and training to the foster families, go to birthday parties, pick head lice, deliver diapers and wipes, go to hospital appointments, supervise visits between the children and their biological parents and do lots and lots of paperwork.

Another group encompasses the men and women who work in the administrative offices. While they don't provide hands-on care for the children, their daily work is equally important to the overall success of the children and Children's Homes, Inc. Their work is focused on the people, churches and businesses who give so that the children have a place to live. They keep you informed about daily life, thank you for your gifts, ask you for more help, count change, maintain financial accounts, speak in churches, change addresses, coordinate Christmas for the children, work with volunteers, etc. In short, they do what they do to give you the assurance that your money or donated items will be used as you wish and with the highest level of stewardship.

Additionally, we have people who run our thrift store, manage our farm, ranch and youth camp, handle the maintenance of our physical plant that continues to grow, change oil in vehicles, mow lawns, weed flower beds, repair appliances and a long list of other tasks that are essential to the overall success of this ministry.

While all of these people have different roles and talents, they are equally important and they have one common purpose: practicing pure religion before the Father.

I count it an honor to partner with all of these people each day in the care of God's children. Yes, it can be very difficult work at times; however, it is still one of the most rewarding works any of us has ever undertaken.

Thank you for making your investments in the lives of the children we serve by helping provide what our staff needs daily to give each child the help, hope and home God wants them to have.

Meet the whole gang

It takes quite a few quality individuals to keep CHI working

How many people does it take to keep a facility like Children's Homes, Inc. running smoothly? That question might sound like the set up for a joke like, "How many (whatever) does it take to screw in a light bulb?" But think about how many individuals would be required for a moment. 10? You may be trying to give it an educated guess because you know roughly how many children can be in CHI's care. So take 10 and add another 12 for houseparents? Add three or four important office types and a secretary for good measure? Our estimate is up to about 25 now.

We have the care of the children and administrative oversight covered in our estimate. What about cutting the grass? Maintaining the fleet of vehicles required to transport the children and houseparents? Teachers at our Balcom Learning Center? What about somebody to replace a family home's busted water heater in the middle of the night? Who makes sure all the house parents have food for the children in their care? When you start thinking of all the areas that needed coverage, that estimate grows a little.

Our current answer to "How many people does it take?" is 52 individuals to maintain all of the details — big and small. That's 52 different personalities, 52 different backgrounds, 52 different sets of talents. However, all 52 staff members have one thing in common: They all strive to enrich the lives of the children in CHI's care. Only the area of enrichment provided by each individual differs. This month we're taking the time to explain what some of those 52 do on a daily basis and maybe provide a face for a name you've been hearing from time to time. So without further ado, meet the CHI staff, class of 2014.

Hidden benefits

In the most recent job posting for houseparents, CHI's ad read "must be a husband and wife team committed to loving and nurturing children." Though it's probably implied, it didn't specifically mention teaching kids basic

It's like raising kids of your own but with a little more added on."

Andra Wellsted

personal hygiene or taking them on their first vacations. Of course, the role of houseparent is a little hard to summarize in a job description because the job is so all-encompassing.

"It's a lot of roles all rolled into one," Andra Wellsted, who has served as a houseparent along with her husband Keith for several years, said. "You're a teacher. You're always there to support the kids — from kissing their boo-boos to filling out paperwork for school. You make sure they get to doctor appointments. We're part psychologist and part psychiatrist. We give them a life more consistent than what they've had in the past. That's something they really need is that structure they haven't had before at home."

Another thing not covered in the job description is the unexpected benefits. A typical parent might have two or three of their own children, but they grow up, progress and eventually move out. Houseparents might raise a child to a certain level where they move on to another home or away from the facility, but there's a new group waiting. And with that almost unlimited supply of new children comes an unlimited supply of feel-good moments.

"It's like raising kids of your own but with a little more added on," Andra said. "You get to see them go through milestones like losing a tooth, riding a bike, seeing a light bulb go on when they get a math concept, making their first new friends at school because they're new and don't know anyone there, camping for the first time. We get to open their eyes to whole new opportunities that they might not have seen before or had otherwise. The real benefit is seeing these little steps that can be such milestones, like learning how to use a knife and fork or showering the right way because no one has shown them how before. We get them through those little accomplishments that are so important."

Along with the little milestones come the occasional huge milestones — like being there when a child with hearing difficulties hears a sound for the first time.

One of the children in the care of Keith and Andra recently was fitted with a hearing aid that allowed him to hear sounds at a normal register for the first time in his life.

"We were sitting on the couch, and I leaned over to him and whispered in his ear, 'Can you hear me now?' And his eyes got big and he yelled 'NO!' and he smiled and just started laughing and laughing. That's a moment that's probably always going to stick with me," Keith said.

Providing the backup

Though the houseparents are the individuals with the children in CHI's care the most, the load of making sure the children are progressing properly does not fall solely on their shoulders. Providing the structure and assistance is the Department

Family Finances

Did You Make a Mistake?

Who did you select to be the executor of your will?

An executor is the person appointed to administer the estate of someone who has died leaving a will which nominates that person as overseer of the estate until settled. Unless there is a valid objection, the judge will appoint the person named in the will to be executor. The executor must ensure that the person's desires expressed in the will are carried out.

FRANK STEPP
Senior VP
THOMPSON & ASSOCIATES

beneficiary) may ask the probate court to assist with decisions so the estate can be settled without too much delay. As you can imagine, such disputes can result in many years of resentment which is exactly what you are trying to avoid in the first place.

A Good Decision

Most often, the best decision is to select only one person to serve as your executor. If you decide to select one of your children and you have multiple children, selecting the oldest child may not be the best decision. Birth order does not necessarily translate into the best order of succession for the ones administering your estate. The role of executor involves many processes and they all tend to be tedious. Selecting the child who is most detailed would be a wise move. You can then list the other children, one after the other, as alternate executors. This will ensure your estate is managed efficiently and reassure the other children that you trust them as well.

Professional Assistance

If you are still concerned about the stress this may put on the children, perhaps you should consider naming a bank, a trust company, or some other professional as your executor. You can pass this job off to them and if the children become upset at the executor, it will be a third party who receives their wrath, not another family member. Besides, three months into probate, your children will thank you for NOT naming them as executor.

If you have concerns about your current or future choice of executor, sit down with your children and discuss it. Once they know about all of the responsibilities that come with the job, they may beg you to select someone else to serve the family in this way. Then there will be no surprises when your will is read.

To learn more about how Children's Homes, Inc. can help you with your estate planning needs, contact Gary Cupp, Director of Development at Children's Homes, Inc. You can reach Gary by phone at 870-239-4031, ext. 140, or via e-mail at gary.cupp@childrenshomes.org.

A Convenient Choice

A spouse is usually listed as the executor (if living) and then, most often, a parent will name their children or siblings to serve in this role. This is the easy and convenient choice. Since we don't want to hurt our children's feelings, we can just name them all as co-executors, and all will be well within the family confines, not that you will know, considering you will have passed when the job becomes available.

It is understandable that a parent would not want to appear to play favorites in naming an executor. However, naming more than one executor of an estate just to avoid hurt feelings can cause more harm than good. If co-executors are named in the will, they must act in unison. That means they must all apply to have the will probated (if probate is necessary), make all decisions unanimously, sign property deeds and titles for transferring assets, and sign on all of the estate's financial accounts, investment accounts, tax returns, and any other paperwork.

Causing Delays

Co-executors must agree and act together on all decisions concerning the estate. Naming multiple executors can cause delays and inconvenience. This is especially true if any of the co-executors live out of town or out of state. If the co-executors have a tendency to disagree, it can create even more delays settling the estate. In cases of extreme disagreements, one executor (or a

Food and clothing warehouse progressing nicely

Since February, when it was little more than a dirt lot, the construction site of our food and clothing warehouse has been the center of a lot of work. Starting at the top left are photos dating from February to April documenting the progression. The photo in the top right corner shows what strongly resembles a building as the crew neared completion of the steel framework. Visit our Facebook page for more up-to-date photos.

Roasted!

Good food, lots of laughter and a tear or two were shared back in March as the Children's Homes, Inc. staff honored former executive director James Balcom with a "Roast and Toast." Friends and colleagues shared humorous stories about their relationships with James. When all the ribbing was complete, James was presented with a proclamation from Gov. Mike Beebe, thanking him for his years of service to the state's children. Bottom right: James and his wife of 50 years, Charlene, were given two scrapbooks documenting their years with Children's Homes, which began when the couple served as houseparents in 1965. Bottom left: Paul Schandavel leans in close on the podium to share some thoughts about James. To see more photos from the event, visit our Facebook page.

of Child and Family Services.

Janet Gregory, supervisor of therapeutic caseworkers and admissions and intake coordinator, describes what the caseworkers do in familiar terms.

“After being here a while I realized, it’s a lot like in a family,” Janet said. “You have the mom and dad. Dad is at work. Mom is at the house dealing with the daily routine. Dad adds some balance and backs up Mom. While the houseparents are in that Mom role, we fill the role of the Dad and make sure we provide that support and that the houseparents have what they need.”

The therapeutic caseworkers work with the houseparents to formulate a growth plan for each individual child in CHI’s care and have regular meetings to chart each child’s progression.

Arvil Hill, CHI development representative, demonstrates how one's title may have very little to do with some work done as he shows how to cut the eyes off of potatoes with residents Jake and Michael.

All over the place

Though each separate position here at Children’s Homes may have its own job description, not a single position is limited to just its description. No matter what one’s title may be, it’s not unusual to see everyone chip in to unload a truck load of donated items or clean up a building after a large group function. Everyone is flexible enough to jump in and help where help is needed, regardless if it fits neatly into their job description.

No individuals encapsulate that “doanything” attitude more than the members of CHI’s maintenance corps. Whether it’s scraping ice off the sidewalks and driveways after a surprise March snow storm or hanging blinds in an office or rescuing a house family after a blowout on the road, the maintenance group is always ready to help.

Along with campus maintenance, the group is charged with keeping things running at both of CHI’s farms — the William and Vacle Olive Ranch and the Emmett Smith Memorial Farm — and at Crowley’s Ridge Youth Camp. Though a lot of maintenance can be scheduled, sometimes emergencies need to be addressed.

“My phone is always on,” Perry Baker, supervisor of maintenance, said. “If they call at 10 at night, we’ll assess the situation and see if it’s something that can be dealt with in the morning, but if it needs to be fixed then, we go out and do it. If a group on the road has a vehicle break down, I’ll go out, get them picked up and get it fixed.”

And everybody else

Given the limited space of this publication, we’re not able to touch on what each individual employee does on a daily basis, but we tried to hit the highlights of positions that attract the most attention or curiosity. Though there’s little doubt that their title doesn’t come close to detailing everything each individual contributes, take a look at all of the individual photos of the CHI staff in this issue and keep an eye out on Facebook. Staff profiles will appear occasionally to provide details about individuals and different positions that this publication doesn’t provide near enough space to delve into.

of Thayer, Mo.

Proceeds from the Casting for Kids Bass Classic benefit Children’s Homes, Inc. Gary Cupp, Children’s Homes, Inc. Director of Development, considered Saturday’s tournament a great success despite a dip in participation from last year’s tournament.

“Although our numbers were down slightly from last year, I am very pleased with this year’s tournament,” Cupp said. “I’ve received calls and messages from several of our fishermen that were very complimentary on how well they felt it was organized, how things flowed, the quality and value of the grab bags and drawing prizes and the general feel for the higher cause — taking care of needy children.”

Cupp said the effort of volunteers and sponsors was what made the tournament run so smoothly.

“I’m very proud of our volunteer staff and children in how hard they worked and how well they worked together,” he said. “And, our sponsors really came through in helping with overhead expenses and product donations that gave our fishermen a sense of ‘winning,’ even if they didn’t have luck out on the water.”

The team of Derrick Dyke and Bill Davis took the Big Bass prize of an Ascend D-10 Kayak, which was donated by Fin to Fur Wholesale of Thayer, Mo.

Change for Children crosses $300,000 mark

For our 2013 Change for Children campaign, we set a rather lofty goal based on the success of last year’s campaign.

The target for the 2013 campaign was $260,000, with an even more difficult-to-attain challenge goal of $270,000. As the calendar year drew to a close, it looked as if the amount collected would land somewhere respectably between the two figures.

But when New Year’s Eve came knocking, we were surprised to find our donors had not only surpassed our challenge goal but also had set a new record for the Change for Children campaign — a whopping $291,202.15.

That’s impressive enough, but after a few year-end gifts came in and one final audit of the campaign was conducted, we ended up with a staggering $300,067.11.

That is amazing and we are so thankful to everyone to participate in this campaign each year. Of course, this success will mean setting an even larger goal for 2014.

As we prepare to set our goals for the 2014 campaign, we thank everyone who participated for their kind support and look forward to another successful campaign this year.

In the summer issue of Spectrum, we’ll announce our 2014 goal and unveil the top 10 Change for Children collection churches in 2013.

The new coinbanks have arrived and some have been shipped. Many congregations are already promoting the campaign this year. Mission Accomplished

The Best Choice UPC project for 2013 was a HUGE success. Thanks to everyone who participated in this worthwhile endeavor to help Children's Homes, Inc. You are appreciated, and we know that you will continue to support this project. I sent in enough Best Choice UPCs to receive $1,650 for the 2013 year. The money will be spent this spring, and a future Spectrum will relay this information to you.

The Campbell's UPCs will probably be sent to the company later this year. We will then order merchandise from the Campbell's catalog.

Please note the following items:

1. We cannot use Always Save brand items.
2. We can use all Best Choice UPCs except those from canned sodas and those from fluid milk.
3. We can use all Campbell's UPCs and all Labels for Education UPCs. If they include a point value, it is better to also include the scanning bar code when they are cut.
